Question 5

I. Read the following passage and answer the questions below.

Every living creature-humans as well as animals are sustained_by the food they consume. Different species require different types of food. Carnivorous animals eat animal flesh and the herbivorous confine themselves to plant foods alone while some indulge in both types.

The controversy goes on even today, regarding which category man belongs to. In the history of any culture, eating of animal flesh was negligible or completely absent from our diet. But today we are facing one of the biggest health challenges in history. Heart diseases, diabetes, kidney diseases, cancer and diseases affecting the joints are very common today, irrespective of how or where we might live. These health problems were rarely observed or heard a few decades ago in our society. Perhaps this is due to the fact that we consumed more natural, healthy food, roughage in the form of food rich in valuable fibers, antioxidants, phytochemicals, B-carotenoids, probiotics,etc.,

The processing and cooking methods used in the preparation of food were totally different in the years gone by. Plenty of pure organic fresh vegetables and fruits, wholegrain rice, wheat, grains, flour and starch unrefined were freely available. Dietary traditions had extensively ritualized with cultural practices. Heavy meals were not recommended after evening hours to minimize the disruptions of one's bodily health. But with so called "development" and globalization everything has changed. Even concerned professionals such as doctors, nutritionists, dieticians and chefs do not pay sufficient attention to this very important aspect of life on which they could provide sound dietary advice to the public. Most importantly, the correct healthy diet is essential in disease prevention and is the foundation for a healthy and happy life. Good health to a large extent could be achieved by merely practicing good nutritional and lifestyle habits combined with the upliftment of the mind.

In days gone by, our custom and pride was to cook for ourselves and our families providing them with healthy and nutritious meals which were prepared under hygienic conditions at home. Today lack of time perhaps as well as the ready availability of many options prompt parents to "pick up a take-away meal" for the family. We cannot really fault them because most of us work today, and we do what we are physically capable of doing within a specified time period. But the value of stretching ourselves that extra bit, and taking the effort to make a clean and nutritious meal for our families cannot ever be measured in terms of maintaining good health at present and building a strong foundation for the future as well

Healthy cooking is based on the therapeutic principles of the ancient wisdom and culinary art. In traditional Sri Lankan cooking we use around 40 spices and condiments, all derived from plant sources. These condiments are used not only as food additives but also been used as powerful medicines for various illnesses for generations. Sri Lankan mothers had such a fascinating knowledge of how these "food items" might be incorporated into cooking as well as medicine. In traditional cooking everything was based on nature. Nothing could substitute for the wealth bestowed_on us by nature-in living or in cooking. The further we move away from nature the more we suffer.

Although today's fast foods meet our needs for convenience, more is lost in the process of cookingMany of these food items contain transfer fats or hydrogenated vegetable oils and plenty of artificial additives. The most important factor is that the "Life Force " in food which cannot be measured in terms of the quantities of vitamins, minerals or calories, most often is destroyed or diminished by artificial or modern methods of cooking.
